Memorial for Andrew Montoya

Andrew Montoya passed away last week after being struck by a car. Andrew was 21 years old. He would have turned 22 on August 8. He just finished his Emergency Medical Technician program at Rio Hondo College and became a certified EMT. He had plans on becoming a firefighter. He is survived by his 2 year old daughter Mila, two brothers, one sister, and his parents. His mother, Brenda Rincon, is a preschool director at La Casa de San Gabriel Community Center. Andrew's family needs the love and support of the La Casa Family and the San Gabriel Community to get through this difficult time. This account has been created to help cover funeral expenses.

San Diego students tackle vaccine controversy

From the August 2015 issue of The Rotarian -- By Sallyann Price

A group of teenage journalism students in suburban San Diego were in the early stages of a new project – an educational film funded by a Rotary grant – when their teacher's phone rang. A prominent blogger had caught wind of what they were doing from a local news story, and wasn't pleased. The fledgling film came under fire almost overnight as ripples of protest spread through the blogosphere. With calls pouring in before shooting had even begun, the advisers considered halting the project, questioning whether it would be worth the controversy surrounding its subject matter: vaccines.

"I've been involved with immunization initiatives for over 20 years now," says Amnon Ben-Yehuda, one of the San Diego Rotary members who had contacted the Emmy-winning broadcast journalism program at Carlsbad High School about a health education project, initially conceived as a 15-minute film about the immune system, in 2011. "We knew there were people out there who were against vaccines, but they didn't represent a force we had to deal with until this project."

Ben-Yehuda chairs a Rotary districtwide committee that works with local health agencies to increase vaccination coverage. He's seen vaccine-preventable diseases affect even affluent neighborhoods, where the barrier isn't access to vaccines but skepticism about their safety. "For about the last 10 years, we've recognized that the important thing is education," he says
